CARD NOTES

An incredibly powerful and resourceful element that is quite diverse in what it can do. Burning Wish allows TES to not play answers for problematic cards by either providing a solution or an alternative route to victory. One of the greatest things Burning Wish does for this deck is it allows Tendrils of Agony to be in the sideboard. This can be said for a couple of the cards in the sideboard. That's the true beauty of Burning Wish — it can be a number of different things.

The "wish board" is comprised of Storm engines, win conditions, protection, and a few solution-based cards. The entire sideboard is not full of Burning Wish targets as it doesn't create the greatest value out of the available slots. Generally, try to have no more than 6-7 Burning Wish targets. Lastly, having included Burning Wish into the deck, threat density is very high in comparison to other Storm decks meaning that less time is spent finding threats with cantrips which leads to a faster kill.

DECK LIST EXPLANATION

With the banning of Underworld Breach and the metagame settling down into something that resembled what it looked like a few months ago, we have a plan on how to fight back. Delver of Secrets decks as well as blue midrange decks with Oko, Thief of Crowns and Uro, Titan of Nature's Wrath have become very popular. While The EPIC Storm feasts on blue midrange decks due to Veil of Summer it can often struggle against the Delver decks.

This is because when we made the swap to Veil of Summer and Wishclaw Talisman, our deck weakened. We lost the basic Island to play Bayou (we also stretched our manabase against a deck with Wasteland to support a fourth color) and our combo got slightly more expensive with Wishclaw Talisman over Infernal Tutor. Recently, we've begun testing Carpet of Flowers to combat these issues and the results are truly terrific.

Carpet of Flowers allows you to cast spells effectively through Spell Pierce or Daze but it also completely changes the dynamic of the game. Opponents will often not cast their two mana threats in fear of not wanting to sacrifice their fetchlands to give you mana, which in return, gives you time to establish yourself. Carpet of Flowers also can allow you to beat a Null Rod or Collector Ouphe that has resolved by providing enough mana to cast Empty the Warrens or simply the right colors to cast Abrupt Decay.
